Course abstract
Aims: The Logic of Social Science Research is a compulsory course for PhD political science studies at the Institute of International Relations and Political Science. It aims to introduce the fundamental epistemological, ontological and methodological debates in the social sciences. The course consists of five thematic modules: 1) Philosophy of the Social Sciences; 2) Conceptualisation, Operationalisation and Measurement of Concepts; 3) Analysis of Concepts of Causality; 4) Interpretative Analysis and 5) Principles of Normative Analysis/Theory. Assessment form and evaluation: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Attendance and participation in all seminars (9 sessions in total)</li> <li>• Completion of assignments</li> </ul> The final grade for the course will be the average of the grades of the five thematic modules. Topics of the sessions I. - Pre-seminar assignments (written): two short essays based on ideas from the readings (~3000 characters each).
- Active participation in seminars.

II. Concepts

Course coordinator: Assoc. Prof. Žilvinas Martinaitis

In-person sessions: 1 seminar (2 hours)

Topics covered: We construct explanations of the social world using theoretically based concepts, but to test theories we need to rely on empirically observable implications of phenomena. To what extent is it meaningful and feasible to combine work on these two "fronts"? This module addresses the issues of conceptualising, operationalising and measuring phenomena.

4. Dirk Leuffen, Susumu Shikano and Stefanie Walter, “Measurement and Data Aggregation in Small-N Social Scientific Research,” European Political Science, 2013, 12, pp. 40-51.

Assignments:

- Pre-seminar assignment: choose a couple of academic papers and prepare to discuss the advantages and disadvantages of the conceptualisation and measurement strategies used there.
- Active participation in seminar:
  - What are the challenges in trying to link the theory with the empirical part? What do we see when we look through our theoretical lenses: the world or the lenses themselves?
  - What are the conceptualisation and measurement strategies? What are their advantages and disadvantages?
- Post-seminar written assignment:
  - Choose one widely used concept (e.g., globalisation, quality of studies; these are just examples – choose your own concept based on the topic of your thesis).
  - Provide a definition, conceptualisation and operationalisation of the concept.

III. Analysis of Causality

Course coordinator: Assoc. Prof. Inga Vinogradnaitė and Assoc. Prof. Žilvinas Martinaitis

In-person sessions: 2 seminars (4 hours)

Topics covered: "Correlation does not imply causation" is probably one of the most hackneyed sayings. But what is causality? In this section, we will discuss the concepts of causality and how it relates to empirical data collection strategies and data analysis methods.

Assignments and requirements:

- Active participation in seminars
  - What are the concepts of causality? Which research methods are (in)compatible with each concept of causality?
  - Prepare to discuss a couple of academic papers (your choice) that have applied different concepts of causality and methods of data analysis.
- Written assignment (pre- and post-seminar):
  - Before the first seminar, provide the teachers with a summary of the theory that is relevant to (or will be used in) the thesis, highlighting the hypotheses (up to 0.5 pages).
  - After both seminars, provide an overview of what methods and concepts of causality (the two best ones) could be used to test the hypothesis(es) identified.

IV. Interpretive analysis

Course coordinator: Assoc. Prof. Inga Vinogradnaitė and Assoc. Prof. Justinas Dementavičius

In-person sessions: 2 seminars (4 hours)

Topics covered: Assumptions, procedures and evaluation criteria for interpretive analysis.

Literature:

Assignments:

- Active participation in seminars.
- Pre-seminar assignment: to prepare a concise written overview, reflecting on the similarities and differences of the texts read, the logic of the research and the validity of the conclusions (these texts will be analysed during seminars).
- Post-seminar written assignment: a brief overview of the material covered with the PhD students' reflections – what is interpretive analysis, what are the procedures that distinguish it, what are the insights for their own dissertations.

V. Normative Political Theory

Course coordinator: Prof. Alvydas Jokubaitis

In-person sessions 1 lecture and 1 seminar (4 hours)

Topics covered: the differences between political science and political philosophy; how knowledge of facts is shaped by normative and ideological assumptions.

Literature:

Lecture "What is Politics?"

Assignments:

- Active participation in the lecture and the seminar.
- After the seminar: write a short paper (~10,000 characters) on any topic related to normative political theory. The choice of topic should be agreed with the professor.
