PROGRAMME DESCRIPTION

The master degree programme of the English Studies consists of three different tracks within the programme:

(1) Literature, Linguistics, Culture; (2) Media Linguistics (Media Discourse); (3) Linguistics.

The aim

The English Studies programme is designed to prepare qualified, independent and creative specialists in English linguistics, literature, and culture, having competences suitable for jobs related to language, literature and culture in the fields of public communication (e.g. the media, publishing industry and cultural institutions). The programme offers students opportunities for developing their ability to reflect on cultural traditions and to critically evaluate cultural diversity and emerging trends in modern society.

The special track in Media Linguistics is designed to help students apply the latest theories and methods of media linguistics, further develop communicative skills in English in various spheres of public communication and create modern media products.

Career opportunities

There is a wide range of opportunities for professional activities. Graduates of the English Studies programme may look for employment not only in the academic field (research in literature, culture and linguistics and teaching literary and language courses at higher education institutions), but also in other diverse areas (editing, translation, lexicography, proofreading and publishing activities, work in literary archives and museums, and various other public institutions and organizations), in which practical application of the acquired knowledge is required.

The qualifications acquired by the graduates of the programme can also be applied in broader areas, including employment in publishing houses specialising in literature for the general public, career in the media focused on scientific, professional and cultural issues, as well as work as translators of fictional and scientific texts. Graduates meet the expectations of employers in the broader labour market by demonstrating their analytical and interpretative skills and knowledge of the contemporary and historical contexts of literature and culture. They also show their wide erudition, ability of critical thinking as well as various subject-specific competences acquired during the studies (e.g. the ability to create scientific and professional texts).

Access to further studies

Graduates who successfully complete the study programme are entitled to apply for a PhD in the Humanities or choose other second-cycle studies in the same field.

KEY LEARNING OUTCOMES

Graduates will:

- be able to analyse, synthesise and critically evaluate trends in linguistics, culture and literature in the social and research environments;

WHY ENGLISH STUDIES AT VILNIUS UNIVERSITY?

The English Studies programme provides an excellent opportunity to acquire a specialist qualification in English literature, culture studies and linguistics with a special track in media linguistics. It is a broad interdisciplinary programme concerned with both the theoretical and empirical analysis of the role of the English language, culture and literature in modern society. The programme consists of three equally balanced blocks of general and subject-specific courses in linguistics, literature and culture and a block of special courses in media linguistics that is designed to help students apply the latest theories and methods of media linguistics, further develop communicative skills in English in various spheres of public communication and create modern media products.

The programme does not only develop students' subject-specific competences, but also provides them with competences necessary to specialise in other fields.

Studies are closely related to the individualisation and differentiation of the study process, development of social skills, principles of study content integration, application of relevant modern methods of teaching and learning.

Vilnius University is a classical university with 440 years of academic traditions and the widest range of study programmes in Lithuania. The university offers an academic environment focused on excellence in research and teaching. Vilnius University is 1st in Lithuania according to national ranking.
